
"Whatever we learn today about cloud technologies' development we are yet behind". This was the slogan of the conference "Best practices of cloud technologies' implementation in the public sector in Europe and Bulgaria" held today at Burgas Regional Administration. This event is a part of the Smart Pa Project in which the institution is a partner of public organizations from Germany, Poland, Greece and Spain. Over 50 representatives of diverse administrations participated in the forum that was opened by Governor Valcho Cholakov. He said that as employees in the public sphere we have to comply with the paces imposed by communication development. The opposite would mean that we do not succeed to follow the rhythm forced by the contemporary society.

During this event the forthcoming webinar on 22 July was announced – a virtual conference under the active participation of all partners and open for all users who wish to be trained. Those who are interested in can take part clicking on the following link : http://www.anymeeting.com/PIID=EB59DB82_874C3E.

In the framework of the project a tutorial and a training hub are created. At this stage the document created by the five partnership countries is accessible in English only. In the coming weeks it will be ready for usage in Bulgarian as well on the web page <http://www.smartpuba.eu>. The Tutorial and the Training Hub help the user to understand the concept of cloud computing presenting best practices from European countries collected within the framework of the project. The project's financing is provided by the Leonardo Da Vinci Programme.
